Attn: Western University: Centre for the Study of Theory and Criticism:

A pedagogy of shadows for muzzled students will only produce masters and doctors of superstition. Western University's Centre for the Study of Theory and Criticism has demonstrated leadership in such pedagogy. Never before have I witnessed such proud unthinking and cultlike compliance with irrational and demonstrably pseudoscientific diktats as at the Theory Centre. Without exception, every faculty member at the Theory Centre with whom I interacted during my tenure as a graduate student has expressed irrational bigotry toward those who have wisely refused mRNA injections. Without exception, they have declined to examine arguments that undermine their psychological and scholarly investments in the myth of a "deadly pandemic," final salvation from which, they piously if not zealously believe, can only be accomplished through the continuous and indiscriminate – and if need be, coercive – injection of much of the human population with experimental gene therapies, falsely claimed to be "safe and effective vaccines." Without exception, Theory Centre faculty have refused to engage in critical questioning, analysis, and discussion concerning Western University's segregationist policies and murderous mRNA injection mandates. Without exception, they have actively and at times vociferously promoted segregation, fascistically branding much of the world's population as ignorant carriers of disease, and foolishly supporting the university's murderous policy of mandating toxic mRNA gene therapy injections as a condition for access to a Western University education.

There is nothing further for me to learn from such a faculty. I have spent much of my time as a Western student informing my peer and professors of the realities behind these institutionalized superstitions. I have done so to the utmost of my ability, as my conscience has required.

I have entered a request for voluntary withdrawal from the university via the student online portal. As of today, I no longer regard myself as having any affiliation with Western University other than as an outspoke witness, from September 2021 to the present, of its Crimes against Humanity.
